Turkey must show it means business on Cyprus talks, President says

Cypriot President Nicos Anastasiades has said that the time has come for Turkey to show whether its rhetoric on wanting a solution of the Cyprus problem or whether, the parties would travel to Geneva for a Conference on Cyprus, merely to have an excursion.

In statements after a luncheon in Limassol, President Anastasiades was asked what to expect after the recent effort in the Cyprus talks where it was not possible for through diplomacy for ‘common ground’ to be found between himself and Turkish Cypriot leader Mustafa Akinci.

“We should maintain a position based on principles, if we truly want progress in the negotiations,” he pointed out.

I have repeatedly said that we have been discussing the same issues for 44 years now, he noted, adding that “the time for truth is here.”

“Does Turkey mean what it says, or are we simply going to travel to Geneva to have an excursion?” he wondered.

At the same time he assured that “I mean what I say, I mean that we must finally deal with the substance of all the chapters, so that during a conference we can achieve what the Cypriot people as a whole wants: a solution of the Cyprus problem which will establish a new state of affairs and which will be able to function and last, which will guarantee stability, future and prospects for all Cypriots. Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots.”

Procedural objections are just excuses, he added.

The dialogue, President Anastasiades reiterated, has been ongoing for 44 years and more recently since Akinci became the Turkish Cypriot leader for over two years. We have exhausted all aspects on the four chapters.

Therefore, he added, we are left with the chapters of security, guarantees and the withdrawal of troops and “if Turkey meant what it says then of course it should accept, always given the principle that nothing can be considered to be agreed if everything is not agreed upon.”

He continued to say that our good faith has been proven on the negotiating table and even through the proposal we have put forward. Therefore, he said, “the time of truth has come. Who truly wishes and seeks a solution which is in the interest of Cypriots and not in the interest of third parties.”

At the same time he rejected statements by AKEL Secretary General Andros Kyprianou that he does not comprehend that these developments might be catastrophic for our side expressing his sorrow because, as he said, despite his past supportive of the talks attitude Kyprianou has changed because of the presidential elections, expected to be held in February 2018.

Early poll sees Anastasiades-Papadopoulos run-off in 2018

In a first presidential election poll published on Sigmalive on Sunday, as things stand today, a run-off second round would see a battle between President Nicos Anastasiades and Diko leader Nicolas Papadopoulos who has the support of the ‘centre-space’ parties.

Even without yet announcing his candidacy, the poll carried out by LS Prime Market Research & Consulting Ltd, showed that Anastasiades would receive 70% of the vote from ruling Diko, 15% of the Diko vote, around 5% of the Edek vote and even 1-2% of Akel voters.

Papadopoulos has 65% support within his own party, 30% of the Edek vote, 20% of the vote from Giorgos Lillakas’ Citizens Alliance – Lillakas is also running. Papadopoulos could also have 30% of the Diko and 5% of the Akel’s Akel, which is running its own candidates though no names have been announced other than Mike Spanos who, according to the poll would secure 63% of Akel voters, 5% of Edek voters, 5% of Diko voters and 1% of Diko voters.

In the poll, Lillakas was supported by 80% of his own party, many of whom did not want him to be the candidate and some have left the party. Elsewhere the polls suggested he could take as much as 15% of the Edek vote and 10% from Akel, the party of which he is a former member. Lillakas could also secure around 7% of Diko voters.

The pollsters acknowledged that at this point in time, with the elections some nine months away, that the scenarios are somewhat hypothetical and only a description of some trends at this moment in time. It was conducted between May 17 and 22 nationwide, polling 1,000 people over 18 by phone.

It found that Anastasiades popularity stood at around 20% and that during a conference we can achieve what the Cypriot people as a whole wants: a solution of the Cyprus problem which will establish a new state of affairs and which will be able to function and last, which will guarantee stability, future and prospects for all Cypriots. Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots. Procedural objections are just excuses, he added.

The dialogue, President Anastasiades reiterated, has been ongoing for 44 years and more recently since Akinci became the Turkish Cypriot leader for over two years. We have exhausted all aspects on the four chapters.

Former Greek Prime Minister Constantine Mitsotakis dies aged 99

Former Greek Prime Minister Constantine Mitsotakis, one of Greece’s most prominent veteran politicians, died early on Monday, his family said. He was 99.

He was “surrounded by people whom he loved and loved him” when he passed away, his family said in a brief statement carried by the semi-official Athens News Agency.

Mitsotakis, whose political career spanned more than half a century, was prime minister of Greece from 1990 to 1993.

Born in October 1918 in Crete, Mitsotakis was first elected to parliament at the age of 28 as a member of a liberal party. With a university degree in law and economics, he held several ministerial posts before becoming leader of the conservative New Democracy party in 1984.

A former of Mitsotakis retired from parliament in January 2004, but remained New Democracy’s honorary president.

His son, Kyriakos, is the incumbent president of New Democracy, now the chief opposition party in the country.
The remains of 16 Greek soldiers who were killed during the 1974 Turkish invasion of Cyprus and of one soldier who was killed on board "FAETHON" in 1964 when the Turkish air force bombed and sank her, return home on Friday. A special ceremony to mark the return of the remains took place after mass at the Church of God’s Nissia in Nicosia. The remains of ten of the Greek nationals were located in the occupied areas of Cyprus and were identified through the identification program of the Committee on Missing Persons (CMP). The other seven identifications were carried out as part of the exhumation and identification program of the Cyprus Republic. Three of the Greek nationals were onboard "FAETHON" when she was blown up by a Turkish air force bomb on Thursday 1st June 1964.

Referring to the Cyprus problem and the efforts underway for reunification, the President said that “we are fully aware of our size and our capabilities and for this reason, all our actions must be well-prepared with one and only objective, the withdrawal of the Turkish army and the abolition of the guarantees, the creation of a modern state that respects the rights of its citizens which will be able to function harmoniously with other states in the international world and will be effective in its participation in the European Union.”

He referred to the proposal he put forward on May 17, a proposal, he pointed out, which is consistent with what has been jointly agreed with the Turkish Cypriot leader, as record in the Geneva Agreements of the United Nations of 1st of December 2016, immediately prior to Geneva, of 12th of January 2017 in Geneva and of 1st of February in Cyprus. He said that the procedure followed so far has not been the desired one as there was no international discussion of the six chapters of the Cyprus problem.

The President in detail referred to the discussions taken place in Mont Pelerin, Geneva as the New York Conference last December on January and to point out that a new Geneva can take place with the completion of the discussions on the political Chapters of Security and Guarantees.

Second, he added, when discussions on security and guarantees are completed, to proceed immediately to negotiations on territorial adjustments.

Third, following completion of discussions on territorial adjustments, stay in Geneva for as long as necessary; essentially it would be a continuous summit of the leaders, not just in order to achieve substantial progress, but even to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Cyprus problem as well.

Minister of National Defence of Greece Panos Kammenos remarked that once the human remains were identified, the relatives were informed by the Committee who tried to give answers to the relentless questions that led to a great ordeal for decades.

He said that the task of CMP will continue, despite the problems in order to give an end to the suffering of the relatives.

The Greek government is striving for a comprehensive solution on June 15, Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras told reporters on Monday, after a joint press conference with Alternate Foreign Minister for European Affairs Nikos Dendias and the leader of the Turkish Cypriot side, Mustafa Akinci.

A solution must come and “sooner the better,” the prime minister reiterated, when asked if this would happen at the Eurozone summit on June 15 or the European leaders’ summit on June 22.

“...we hope for a solution in every direction in order to achieve the best possible results the soonest. He also pointed out that Turkey’s stance hinders the solution, noting that Turkey has the capacity to demand from Ankara to grant permission for excavations in military zones. He also referred to the tragic issue of the remains of ten Greek citizens which will be able to function harmoniously with other states in the international world and will be effective in its participation in the European Union.”

The President assured that these efforts will be intensified in every direction in order to achieve the best possible results the soonest.

Tsipras presented his talks as “constructive” and that Estonia was taking over the EU presidency at a time presenting serious challenges, including the need to build a new vision on which to build the foundations of a stable Eurozone, so that there can be a stable Eurozone exit from the economic crisis.

In a joint press conference after the meeting, Tsipras said that Estonia was “constructive” and that he had presented his talks as “constructive” and that Estonia was taking over the EU presidency at a time presenting serious challenges, including the need to build a new vision on which to build the foundations of a stable Eurozone, so that there can be a stable Eurozone exit from the economic crisis.

Britain says some of Manchester bomber’s network potentially still at large

Members of Manchester suicide bomber Salman Abedi’s network are still potentially at large, British interior minister Amber Rudd said on Sunday, after the terrorism threat level was lowered due to significant progress in the investigation.

Police have said they have arrested a large part of the network behind the bombing, which killed 22 people at a concert hall, and two more men were arrested on Saturday as police continued to close in on the group.

Asked during an interview on BBC television whether some of the group were still at large, Rudd said: “Potentially, it is an ongoing operation. There are 11 people in custody, the operation is still really at full tilt in a way.”

Prime Minister Theresa May said developments in the investigation into the bombing meant intelligence experts had decided to lower the threat level from its highest rating “critical”, meaning an attack could be imminent, to “severe”.

Police have issued a photograph of Abedi, a 22-year-old Briton born to Libyan parents, taken on Monday night before he blew himself up and said they believed he had assembled his bomb in an apartment in the city centre.

British officials have confirmed the man recently returned from Libya and the officers said police needed information about his movements from May 18 when he returned to Britain.

Abdedi was known to British security services before the bombing, the government has said, but Rudd declined to comment on exactly what he knew about him and his views as long ago as five years before he carried about Monday’s attack.

The intelligence services are still collecting information about him but I wouldn’t rush to conclusions, as you seem to be, that they have somehow missed something, Rudd said.

May’s lead narrows after Manchester attack

B ritish Prime Minister Theresa May’s lead over the opposition Labour Party has narrowed sharply, according to five opinion polls published since the Manchester attack, suggesting she might not win the landslide predicted just a month ago.

Four opinion polls published on Saturday showed that May’s lead had contracted by a range of 2 to 6 percentage points, indicating the June 8 election could be much tighter than initially thought when she called the snap vote.

“Our Theresa is certainly the overwhelming favourite to win but crucially we are in the territory now where how well she is going to win is uncertain,” John Curtice, a leading political scientist who is president of the British Polling Council, said.

Curtice, who is a professor of politics at the University of Strathclyde, told Reuters.

He added that this conclusion “is certainly the overwhelming favourite to win but crucially we are in the territory now where how well she is going to win is uncertain.”

The Turkish side has never honoured the agreement on enclaved Cypriots, Nicosia tells the UN

Kornelios Korneliou, the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Cyprus to the UN, said on Thursday that the Turkish side has never honoured the agreement reached in Vienna, on August 2, 1975, vis-à-vis the enclaved population in the northern, Turkish-occupied part of Cyprus.

Speaking during a Security Council open debate on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict, Kornelios outlined the obligations of the Turkish side in providing "every help to lead a normal life, including facilities for education and the practice of their religion, as well as medical care by their own doctors and freedom of movement in the north”.

In practice, he pointed out, the Cypriot enclave was subjected to constant harassment.

Referring to the dwindling numbers, Kornelios said that in July 1974, after more than 160,000 Cypriots were forced to flee their ancestral land, a significant number amounting to 20,000 remained enclaved in the occupied part of the country.

He added that in 41 years since 1974 this number has diminished from 20,000 to only 405, after being subjected to constant harassment, including physical assaults, restrictions to their movement, denial of access to adequate medical care, denial of adequate educational facilities especially beyond the elementary school level, censorship of school books, curtailment of their right to use and bequeath their immovable property and curtailment of freedom of worship in their churches and monasteries.

Despite minor improvements in the lives of the enclaved due to the help of UNFICYP, their living conditions remain deplorable and unchanged, the Permanent Representative stressed.

He added that this conclusion is fully in accord with the findings of the European Commission of Human Rights and the judgment of 30 May 2001 of the European Court of Human Rights, which ordained the right of the enclaved as part of the Fourth Interstate Application of Cyprus against Turkey.

Outlining the position of the Cypriot government, Kornelios said that the United Nations will be an effective and credible organisation in the extent that it strengthens its ability to respond to the needs of the people in hardship.

The protection of civilians must be at the core of the Security Council’s agenda, not only in connection to peacekeeping missions explicitly mandated for the protection of civilians but as integral part of a comprehensive approach encompassing all aspects related to prevention, peacekeeping and peacebuilding and the promotion of international peace and security, he concluded.

The recent constitutional change has created seven additional regional and local elections in the northern region, as well as medical care by their own doctors and freedom of education and for the practice of their religion, including facilities for education and the practice of their religion, as well as medical care by their own doctors and freedom of movement in the north.”

POLLS since the attack showed little evidence that May – who as a former interior minister oversaw the police and domestic intelligence agency – had gained support.

“The campaign has changed,” Johnny Heald, managing director of ORB International, said.

“Expect to see a forensic focus on Brexit and security over the next two weeks.”

ORB said May’s lead had halved to 6 percentage points, according to an online poll carried out May 24-26, from 18 percentage points in a comparable poll on May 11.

ORB said May’s lead had halved to 6 percentage points, according to an online poll carried out May 24-25.

A YouGov survey of 2,003 people between May 25-26 showed May’s lead had narrowed 7 percentage points from nine a week ago.

The polls painted a complicated picture of public opinion, with Britons’ current voting intentions being influenced by both the deadly Manchester attack and May’s unpopular social care proposals.

Conservative election strategist, Lynton Cnsby, has ordered a return to May’s main message: that only Theresa May can be trusted to negotiate Brexit, The Sunday Times reported.

UK Cypriot Cllr George Pippas elected Mayor of Cambridge

Cllr George Pippas has been elected Mayor of Cambridge for the coming municipal year. Pippas is from Palomotico, in Cyprus which is situated 12 miles from Nicosia near the old Nicosia Airport. He is the sixth in line out of nine children (Six boys and three girls).

He is married to Anastasia Pippas who is from the same village and they have three children: Christina, Gregory, and Antoni.

His primary education was in his village and his secondary education was at the Pan-cyprian Gymnasium Kýkko for boys in Nicosia where he was awarded a prize by President Makarios for academic excellence.

After having spent nearly three years as a lieutenant in the Cypriot National Guard, a term which included him serving in the war of 1974, he came to read Electronic Engineering at Cambridge. He also holds a second degree in Business Management and belongs to various professional bodies such as the Chartered Institute of Marketing, Institute of Quality Assurance and the Institute of Chartered Engineers.

After graduation, he worked for various Blue-Chip organisations.

The project’s financing is totally covered by the European Fund of Strategic Investments marking the first infrastructure project to be financed under the EU’s new Financing for Climate Action (F4CA) door.

According to KODAP budget, in 2016 the organisation paid €7.3 million to maintain the necessary fuel stocks. The operation of the terminal is expected to generate a benefit of €70 million in not present value, Malekos added.

The project will be financed by the European Fund of Strategic Investments marking the first infrastructure project to be financed to receive EFLI financing. The Fund will supply 75% of the project, amounting to €50 million, while the remaining amount will be covered by a loan with domestic banks and cash reserves, KODAP President said.

“There is big interest by local companies and banks to finance the remaining €50 million,” Malekos added.

Iron deficiency anaemia

Looking after our blood is vital for good health, and blood disorders can be frightening. Consultant Haematologist Perla Eleftheriou explains one of the most common blood disorders and explains what you can do about it.

What is iron deficiency anaemia?
Our blood consists of three main types of cells: red cells, platelets and white cells. The red cells contain haemoglobin, which is what enables the red cells to carry oxygen around the body. In order to keep our body well supplied with oxygen, we need plenty of haemoglobin. Low haemoglobin is what is called anaemia.

Iron deficiency (insufficient levels of iron in the body) leads to less haemoglobin, less healthy red cells and a poor supply of oxygen to all parts of the body.

Why might I have it?
There are several causes:
1) A diet consistently low in iron. For example vegetarians and vegans are at a high risk of developing iron deficiency.
2) Blood loss due to heavy menstruation or bleeding in the stomach or urinary tract. Look out for unexpected blood when you go to the toilet.
3) Poor iron absorption. You might be eating enough iron rich food but problems with your stomach or bowels could be preventing you from extracting the nutrients you need.
4) Pregnancy. Pregnant women require higher levels of iron to supply both the baby and themselves.
5) Gastritis. The bacterium Helicobacter pylori usually causes no problems but it can lead to stomach inflammation and ulcers and low iron stores. It is diagnosed with a simple stool test if you suspect it is affecting you in this way.

How can I tell?
Some patients with iron deficiency anaemia have no symptoms; others experience fatigue, weakness, sleepiness, headaches, an inability to concentrate, dizziness, vague fullness or nausea, or cold hands and feet. Fatigue might also be due to a blood disorder such as leukaemia or in the early stages of anaemia that is not yet severe. Pica (the craving for non-food items such as hair) is another possible sign of severe iron deficiency; this annual symptom is the compulsive eating of non-food items such as ice, chalk, and clay.

A simple blood test showing abnormal ferritin and other specific iron markers will tell your doctor that you have iron deficiency. Profoundly low iron stores will be accompanied by low haemoglobin levels and smaller red cells than normal.

Infection, inflammation and the common cold can all affect the results of the iron profile blood test. For a reliable result, the test usually needs to be repeated when the infection has settled.

Should I be worried?
Anaemia can make existing disorders worse, such as heart disease or liver disease. It also increases the risks for pregnant women and their babies. If you are one of these at risk groups, you should monitor your iron intake and look out for symptoms of deficiency. You might need to take a dietary supplement.

Iron deficiency is the most common nutritional deficiency worldwide and iron deficiency anaemia is one of the commonest types of anaemia.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) estimates that 25% of people in developing countries suffer from iron deficiency anaemia. It is the commonest type of anaemia. If you suspect that you are among them, speak to your GP. You might need a referral to a Haematologist.

In the UK, we are fortunate to have the NHS, which provides the best standard of care for all its patients. Here Dr Eleftheriou gives expert advice on iron deficiency anaemia.

teams. Salamina’s winner will come from former Olympia player Adel El fitah. He has been one of Cipro’s prolific scorer over the years and a favourite with their supporters. On the night of course he was running the forward line for Salamina and as the ball dropped to him he turned and hooked the ball in the net from six yards. It was enough to give the red machine their forth trophy of the season. After the fi nal whole Salamina’s supporters joined in the celebrations . The trophies were presented for the last time by retiring KOPA chairman Lakis Chrysochou.

The FA Cup as a Top Tier Trophy

By MARIOS LENIODOU

Most who attempt to reduce the worth of the trophy that Arsenal lifted for a record 13th time last Saturday base their arguments on the notion that most of the elite teams in England refuse to field their strongest 11 players for some FA Cup matches. When considered with its proper context, the premise is weak.

In the past 29 seasons, the FA Cup has only been won four times by a team other than Arsenal, Manchester United, Chelsea or Liverpool. In one of these years the champion was Manchester City (2011). Essentially, only three times since 1989 has a club that is not among the elite in English football (and indeed world football) lifted the trophy. This is not a damning testament to the prestige and importance of the competition then I have few ideas as to what it is.

When analysing the importance of a competition, the amount and quality of teams competing in that competition are necessary aspects of the criteria that measure its importance. There were 736 teams that competed for this season’s FA Cup. To argue that the trophy is of little worth to top teams because they chose to rotate their squad for Cup games is outright dismissive of the wider context of top-tier football in England and Wales, which has a rich domestic trophy. The English Football League (EFL) Cup, previously named the Capital One Cup and Carling Cup, is the second domestic cup in England, and is open to any club within the top four levels of the English football league system, which amounts to 92 teams. By comparison, the Coppa Del Rey played host to 83 teams this season, the Coppa Italia, 78, and the DFB-Pokal, 64. The Germans enjoy a luxury of 34 league games per season (18 teams feature in the Bundesliga), and, along with the football teams in Spain, Italy and France, a Christmas break. More teams competing for a trophy, and more competitions to compete in, means more games to play, which means that the football season in England is more demanding than elsewhere. Consequently, there is greater demand for an understanding and implementation of the sciences of periodization and fitness management in England than anywhere else in the world.

Thus, it is simplyidealistic to believe that the likes of Arsenal, Chelsea, Manchester United and Manchester City can afford to field their best teams for every Cup game whilst competing for the League title and partaking in European football. On the matter of domestic trophies generally, critics of the FA Cup should watch the interviews and celebrations of the likes of Cristiano Ronaldo and Lionel Messi after Coppa Del Rey victories. The forward line for Salamina and as the ball dropped to him he turned and hooked the ball in the net from six yards. It was enough to give the red machine their forth trophy of the season. After the fi nal whole Salamina’s supporters joined in the celebrations . The trophies were presented for the last time by retiring KOPA chairman Lakis Chrysochou. Teams, Salamina Darren, Andreas, James, Ryan, Biris, Murat, Chris, Per-cy, Aftet, Eirichand Alex, Subs Harrison, Kyri, Constantin, Lawrence, Olympia, Avrinas, Kanaris, Alkrok, Eurej, Wright, Yianni, Buramon, Cac-ciegiolu, Iiad, Ceylan and Lucas, Subs, Kaphounis, Perdikou, Anwar, Bradshaw, Lambrou, Officialis, Koskas, Stefanou and Sal-ina.

KOPA AGM

KOPA’s AGM takes place on Sunday, 18th of June at the community centre. First there was none and then four came along. It now appears that outgoing chair Lakis Chrysochou was to resign has once again put his name for-ward along with Michael Yiakoubas and two other members of the committee George Georgiou and Jack Markou.

Surprisingly there is no one from outside wanting the job considering there has been a bit of unrest amongst the club wanting changes all around. Mind you, we have had this under the media for the 40 years plus and when it came to taking some action no one was prepared to come forward to do the job. There is no question that in general new blood is needed to prop up this long estab-lishment but it needs people who have been the most consistent team of the year a team that never stops work-ers for some FA Cup matches. When considered with its proper context, the premise is weak. Let us analyse the notion.

There is a growing school of thought that argues the Football Association (FA) Cup is worth little to top tier clubs – to use the words of many following the season’s victory on Saturday, it is a second tier trophy.

This school of thought uses a number of arguments to devalue the oldest competition in world football. Let us analyse the notion. The truth is, there is immense value in history. The attmpted devaluing of a competition rich in historic and cultural value is fatally flawed, ungrounded, and dismis-sive of many aspects that are evidently evident in every single round of FA Cup fixtures, every season.
